The Court draws a marked distinction between this act and that other act, which, in the Royall case, was decided unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States.
The opinion is as follows:

HAT THE UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT DIS

what the power of the State.

What the power of the State.

What the bower of the State.

But let us analize and critically consider what the Supreme Court of the United States meant by the language, "if a State officer refuses to beste a license to a person who have the state of the analysis and required by law." By its terms this sentence means, necessarily, either that the amount so tendered was tendered the analysis tendered was tendered in more of in growing tax-receivable conjours, and the amount so tendered was reduced in more of in growing tax-receivable conjours, and the amount so tendered was refused, and the license decided by an officer acting in chedlence to an unconstitutional statute, then the person as tendering the amount so refused get the license before doing business. But not so if any of these elements are waiting—that is, if the officer, not acting in chedlence to a state statute, shall religibly refuse to receive the amount so tendered, and iseas such license; or if the amount so tendered, and iseas such license; or if the amount so tendered, and iseas such license; or if the amount so tendered, and iseas such license; or if the amount be not tendered in money, or in seasonable doubts impressed upon aim by the pain terms employed by the Legislature in the preemble and in the body of the acts referred to a coostinational statute of the State, and the officer makes such refusal in obedience to a coostinational statute of the State, then in such case the Supreme Court of the Initial States did not say, or intend to say, in lay all scase, that the person tendering need not take legal steps to compel the issuance of lice new better done brokens. The COUTON CONTRACT.

Eech that court and this court had held that by the terms of the act of March 30, 1871, the coupons of Virginia were made receivable for all taxes, debts, dues, and demands due the State, and that by the surrender of their old bonds and the acceptance of two thirds of their amount in new bonds, with coupons annexed whereon was expressed such tax-receivability, constituted between the creditors of the State a contract that was irrepealable without the consent of both parties. Autonics, Wright, 22 Gratt., 822; Hartman ex, Greenhow, 162 U.N., 572. In the case last named the Federel count held that "the right of the coupon-holder is to have his coupon received for taxes when offered," and that "any act of the State which forbids the receipt of these coupons for taxes is a violation of the contract and void as against the coupon-holder."

The conclusion, then, was irresistible that an act which compelled the Treasurer under all circumstances to refuse to receive coupons when offered in payment of taxes, whether direct or in the form of license assessments, impairs the obligation of the coupon contract, and is unconstitutional and void. But the act of March 4, 1886, here under consideration, is wholly different. It does not forbed the Treasurer to receive the coupons of the State, but only makes it his duty to withhold the certificate required as preliminary to the license until the papers purporting to be tax-receivable coupons of the State shall be verified and identified a vording to the act of January 14, 1882. It does not violate the obligation of the coupon contract; on the contrary, on its very face it preserves that obligation, which it to receive coupons of the said act of 14th January, 1882, to license accessments, to which, in spirit, it was already applicable. The statement in the preamble of that act must be couponed for the licent of the said act of the cupon to hard because and p

January 14, 1882, for the remeily by mandamis was not unconstitutional. The Chief Justice did say: "The question we are now to combide it not whether, if the conjon tembered is in fact graning and such as well tender is the factorized and the tender is kept good, the Treasurer can proceed to collect the tax by distrain or such other process as the law allows without making himself personally responsible for any treepass he may commit, but whether the set of 1922 violates any implied obligation of the state in respect to the remedies that may be employed for the conforcement of liscontractif the collector refuses to take the coupons." He then proceeds to say: "It cannot be denied that, as a general rule, laws applieable to the case which are in force at the time and place of making a contract enter into and form a part of the contract liketic, and that this entraces alike those laws which affect its validity, construction, discharge, and conferement.
